Peg Regan

Peg Regan married her high school sweetheart from Edison, NJ. They have two sons and three grandsons. They began vacationing in Vero in the 1990's, bought their first home here in 2003, and became full time residents in 2021. Avid golfers, the Regans belong to The Moorings Yacht and Country Club. Peg received a BA in computer science from Rutgers and worked largely in pharmaceutical research and technology, eventually launching her own business in 1996. After it was acquired, she started advising entrepreneurs and small businesses through Regan Advisory Services, LLC. An avid volunteer, she was on the board of Massachusetts Down Syndrome Congress. Beth Livers and Maria Calderone introduced her to Impact 100. She liked that grants focused on the Indian River community with varied missions vs. a specific singular mission across many communities. Most importantly, she liked the grant selection process, allowing members to choose their individual top applications, and the process of ensuring these grantees follow through with their commitment. And of course, having run a woman owned business, it doesn't hurt that this is a woman-based organization!

Pricilla Hammond

Pricilla Hammond started coming to Vero 30 years ago when her parents retired here. She and her husband Dale have been seasonal residents since they bought a house in Vero some 15 years ago, but she still loves spending summers with her five grandchildren in Connecticut. A graduate of Barnard College in NYC, she received her law degree from Vermont Law School and before retiring, had her own law firm and practiced child protection law in Connecticut. The Hammonds are members of Vero Beach Country Club, where she heard about Impact 100 from Linda Triolo and Suzi McCoy Shriner.

Allison Venditti

Allison Venditti is a two-chapter Impact 100 member. While living in southern Palm Beach County, her neighbor, who was on the executive committee of Impact 100 PBC, asked her to join. It was a great experience so she didn't hesitate to join Impact 100 IRC when Cathy Curley asked her. She feels both Impact chapters attract interesting and highly talented women who desire to do good works to improve the lives of those in need in our community. Allison is from the Houston area and has expertise in finance; she holds a BBA in both finance and accounting with a minor in economics, and an MBA. She and her husband are new to Vero, having lived here for about two years. She has retired as a Chartered Financial Analyst, and is now working with her husband, who is a paper broker specializing in import and export of paper products. And, yes, they, too, are experiencing shipping challenges.
